Key Difference – Book vs Thesis

A thesis is a long analytical piece of writing on a particular subject, which is typically done for an academic degree. Thesis generally takes the format of a book, but it is not the same as a book. A book is written to communicate ideas or to narrate a story to readers whereas a thesis is written to showcase the knowledge of the student. Thus, the key difference between book and thesis is their focus and purpose.

What is a Book?

A book is a written, printed, illustrated work or blank pages fastened together and bound in covers. Various publications such as textbooks, map books, guidebooks, novels, notebooks, dictionaries, encyclopedias, poetry books, etc. are considered as books. Books have always been one of the most important sources of information and education. A book can provide information in the format of text and illustrations (pictures, graphs, maps, tables, etc.). Books can provide a wealth of information on theoretical subjects as well as practical subjects.

Books can be mainly divided into two categories as fiction and nonfiction. Fiction is literature that involves fabricated or imaginary stories, events, and people. These include formats such as novels, short stories, plays, etc. Nonfiction is literature that is informative and factual. Books that provide knowledge and information fall into this category. Biographies, essays, encyclopedias, and textbooks are some examples of nonfiction.

A thesis is typically created to showcase the extensive knowledge of the student. He or she is guided by other experienced professionals and examined by a panel of judges. Thus, the target audience of a thesis is the panel of judges and the writer himself. The style of writing is strictly academic, is typically boring for a layman.
